Intensive Interaction is an approach to assisting learners who experience Profound and Severe Intellectual and often multiple disabilities to become more successfully involved in social interactions, even though they may appear to have very few communicative behaviours.

When the approach is used to underpin interactions with learners further isolated by Autistic Spectrum Disorders it appears to contribute to a general shift from an inner to an outer, more social world.

This full day programme addresses the following topics:

What is Intensive Interaction?

Who is it for?

Where does it come from?

What underpins it?

Does it work? Is there an evidence base?

Change of perspective: what is different about this approach?

What do you do?

What does it look like?

How do practitioners begin?

What is different about Intensive Interaction?

How might practitioners record it?

How can you record, evaluate and monitor progress?

Staff development

Advice on protocols and policies

Embedding it into a curriculum / care plan

This challenging and informative day addresses how to implement begin doing Intensive Interaction. The approach is used in a variety of contexts and wide range of services for learners with severe-profound intellectual disabilities as well as those whose disabilities are augmented by Autistic disorders.
