building inclusive communities

WANTED

Are you a social worker or someone working alongside disabled people in their parenting role?

If so, we have a heavily subsidised place available to you on this, the last course in a series of 2 day events, which could greatly enhance your career prospects. If you are a social worker this will also count towards your post registration training and learning hours.

Family Matters

Circles Network
building inclusive communities

The Family Matters Project uses a holistic person centred approach to supporting disabled people in their role as parents. The project has developed a dynamic pack which is intended to give professionals a deeper insight to families they are working with whilst helping build rapport and open up effective channels of communication. The pack contains a wide range of information and practical tools which can be used in a variety of situations, from initial meetings right through to the assessment process and beyond.

As with all our work this course is in line with the National Occupational Standards for working with parents and learning will therefore be of a reflective nature.

What do we ask in return...

That, having enjoyed the 2 days of shared learning, you will take some of the tools away and use them in your support of disabled parents

...and then feed back on both your experience of using the tool and any comments the parents may have made.

Family Matters, a project funded by the DfES, to support disabled people in their role as parents and to spread the learning in this field of work

Circles Network is a national organisation working with individuals experiencing exclusion or at risk of isolation and discrimination
