Meeting the mental needs of children and young people who have intellectual disability

A meeting organised by the Intellectual Disability Forum of the Royal Society of Medicine

Educational aims: To provide an overview of mental health challenges, their natures, prevalence and evidence-based treatments as they relate to children and young people with intellectual disability.

To explore clinician and service user perspectives in order to ascertain common ground relevant to service development and provision.

Objectives: To understand the nature, presentations, clinical implications and service/treatment issues relevant to mental health issues in children and young people with intellectual disability.

To appreciate service user, as opposed to clinician, perspectives and how these can be reconciled productively

To understand the importance and usefulness of semi-structured, evidence-based, clinically-orientated and user-friendly inventories and assessment tools in this field
