

About the Foundation for People with Learning Disabilities

What is important to me as a self-advocate:

*“That the Foundation for People with Learning Disabilities
works to support me as a consultant to learn new things together, like training, leadership, research, person centred planning and developing my circle of support.”*

Who we are

Our aims are to:

- stick up for the rights of people with learning disabilities and their families
- help get good chances in life for people with learning disabilities and their families.

What we do

We work with people with learning disabilities, their families and those who support them to:

- do research and projects that help people be included
- support local people and services to include people with learning disabilities
- improve services for people with learning disabilities
- spread knowledge and information.

You can find lots of information about our work on our website: www.learningdisabilities.org.uk

How we are funded

We get grants to do projects and research.

We get paid to help services improve.

We get gifts (donations) from people who care about our work.

We are part of a registered charity, the Mental Health Foundation.

Can we help you?

We can offer support and training to help you improve your services or how you work.

We can check how services are doing and help create new ways of working.

Our website has lots of good information and useful links. You can join our email forums and networks.

A service commissioner on support from the Foundation:

“I don't think there is another organisation that is more experienced in working with people with learning disabilities.”

What is important to me as a mum of a young person with learning disabilities:

“That all service providers work as a team with families to provide the needs of the person with a learning disability living at home, otherwise they will be left to provide for our needs as well.”
