Morning

Challenging behaviour: good practice in working with people whose behaviour is described as challenging

People whose behaviour is described as challenging are amongst the most vulnerable to poor services, poor intervention and abuse. Yet over the last two decades we have seen a wealth of policy, research evidence and good practice guidance as to what works and how services should be developed and delivered. This event will bring together the main stakeholders in services for people whose behaviour is described as challenging and examine what is good practice and how this can become embedded in everyday working.

This event is linked to the Challenging behaviour: a training pack published by Pavilion Publishing. Steve Hardy, the event chair is one of authors of the pack which is designed to help staff develop good practice in working with people with learning disabilities whose behaviour is described as challenging.

Afternoon

Sexuality and people with learning disabilities: exploring sexuality and relationships

One of the main aims of this seminar is to assist delegates to stop thinking of sexuality as a 'problem' for people with learning disabilities (as has long been the case), and to offer ideas about about framing it more positively. The seminar aims to provide practical and realistic ideas for supporting people with learning disabilities and will cover many areas concerning sexuality and people with learning disabilities. Those who attend should leave better informed about ways to help people achieve more positive and valued sexual lives.

This event is linked to Sexuality and learning disabilities: a handbook published by Pavilion Publishing. One of the authors, David Thompson, joins the panel of speakers alongside other local experts.

1.45pm Registration and refreshments
