

One of the key recommendations made by the guideline is that people with a learning disability should be given information in a way that they can understand.

There is a range of documents in accessible format, which aim to offer clear information to people who take medication for their behaviour problem.

These documents include:

- An easy read guide to taking medication for your behaviour problem.
- 35 easy read leaflets, each offering information about a different medication commonly used to manage behaviour problems.
- Audio recordings of the above, available to use in a CD player or a computer.

All of these guides and other documents are freely available to download, copy and distribute from:

www.LD-medication.bham.ac.uk

These documents were produced by a Guideline Development Group, the University of Birmingham, the Royal College of Psychiatrists and MENCAP, following the N.I.C.E. guideline development procedures, and funded by the Big Lottery Fund.
