Mental health and adults with autistic spectrum conditions

About the conference

Autistic spectrum conditions (ASCs) are lifelong, complex conditions resulting in mild to severe social, language and communication impairments. Autism is still a relatively unknown disability but affects over 500,000 people throughout the UK. This highly prominent conference will bring together leading experts in the field to discuss the central issues and practical management of both autism and Asperger syndrome.

Unlike other conferences, this seminar brings mental health issues to the forefront, an area which is often overlooked. It will allow you to explore psychological interventions, service delivery and how to support people with autism through adulthood. You will be presented with an update on national policy, as well as hearing valuable first-hand experience from those people with autism.

Join us at this stimulating conference for the exchange of exciting new ideas and privileged access to current thinking from leading academics and policy makers in the field. You will leave with fresh ideas about how to incorporate effective services and how to tackle mental health issues for people with autism.

Key themes

The conference will explore:

- the mental health needs of adults with ASC
- the views of people using services
- national strategy for adults with ASC
- presentation of mental health problems in people with ASC
- psychological interventions
- training staff to support adults with ASC

Aims of the conference

The conference will give you the opportunity to:

- participate in a busy forum and learn about best practice
- learn about ongoing clinical research within the field
- understand the latest therapeutic interventions
- explore the services needed for effective management of autism and Asperger syndrome
- debate and discuss the central issues with leading practitioners

Who should attend?

The conference is aimed at all medical professionals in this field and individuals working in the field of specific learning disabilities as well as health and social care professionals working in statutory, private and voluntary services, including:

- psychiatrists
- psychologists
- social workers
- therapists
- general practitioners
- nurses
- commissioners of mental health and learning disability services
- people using services as well as their families and carers

About Brookdale Care

Brookdale Care is the leading independent provider of specialist hospital, residential and supported living care services for adults with autistic spectrum condition (ASC).

Our services are designed to meet the challenging needs of adults with ASC who may also require support for their mental health needs, challenging behaviour, social and communication difficulties and development of independent living skills.

Individuals with ASC are unique in their needs and abilities and our innovative approach specialises in providing a therapeutic environment that centres on personalised care pathways to a more independent style of living.
