

Positive About Sensory

This course will give you a detailed insight in to the sensory world of children, young people and adults with autism.

Our training is active, visual and fun. We don't use ten words where two will do. We're positive about autism and that's reflected in the style and content of our workshops and events. We believe in learning that's fun, enlightening and enabling. We explain autism and equip practitioners with some tools they can use right away. This course is for everyone who wants a greater understanding of the sensory differences in autism.

People with autism have said that the world, to them, is a mass of people, places and events which they struggle to make sense of, and which can cause them considerable anxiety. Children, young people and adults with autism often sense the world around them in a highly individual way. It's vital for practitioners to understand how sensory processing and sensory sensitivity differences affect learning and behaviour.

This course will help you assess sensory differences in children young people and adults with autism and develop a support plan which incorporates individual and environmental strategies.

Topics covered includes; hypo and hyper sensitivity, sensory processing, the evidence base for practice, the individual perspective, sensory rooms, sensory therapy/learning.

If you work in education, healthcare, social care, supported living then...
