About the seminar

The recent Panorama programme about the abuse of people with learning disabilities at a private hospital (Winterbourne View) has reignited the debate about institutional care, and raised public awareness and concern about the treatment of some of our most vulnerable citizens.

Is there a place for hospital beds for people labelled as 'challenging'? How can individualised services be delivered for people with complex support needs during difficult financial times? Is the regulatory framework 'fit for purpose' when it comes to the most vulnerable people in society? How should staff at all levels be trained, developed and supervised who work with people who have complex needs/challenging behaviour?

Aims of the seminar

- To explore these and other questions as commissioners, providers, practitioners, people with learning disabilities themselves and their families aim to learn the lessons from this distressing example of abuse.
- There will also be round table discussions where delegates will be able to put forward their views around how improvements and changes can be made.

Who should attend?

- Frontline social and health care workers in community and residential settings
- Providers of services – public, private and voluntary sector
- Commissioners of learning disability and complex needs services
- GP consortia leads
- Charities working with and representing people with learning disabilities
- Unpaid carers, unpaid volunteers and natural supports
- Self-advocates

New free-to-attend lectures announced at ORT House Conference Centre, London

The future of funding of care and support – 28 October 2011

Exploring the implications of the Commission on Funding of Care and Support recent recommendations on social care funding reform. Our guest lecturer is James Lloyd, Director at The Strategic Society Centre.

Progress in patient-centred care – 9 November 2011

Ten years after the publication of the Bristol Royal Infirmary Inquiry, Sir Ian Kennedy delivers the evening lecture, which will open a debate about progress in patient-centred care. Sir Ian will be accompanied by Maria Von Hildebrand and Dr Phil Hammond.

Health and Wellbeing Boards: their role in securing better health and better health and care services – 21 January 2012

The lecture explores what has emerged as one of the more widely welcomed proposals of the NHS bill, the health and wellbeing board. Decisions around commissioning processes and structures over recent months have served to strengthen further the role that health and wellbeing boards will have in providing primary and secondary social care. The lecture will be delivered by Andrew Cozens CBE, LG Group Strategic Adviser and LG Group Strategic Lead on Adult Social Care, Health and Community Wellbeing.
